Question 4
role play
1. Salary Negotiation Role-Play
_Setting: Meeting room. Workers Rep vs Management Rep

Management rep :"Good afternoon team. Thank you for coming in. Please, have a seat."
Worker's rep:"Good afternoon.Thanks for your time. The reason we're here is to discuss wages. With fuel, rent and food prices up, our members are really struggling. We're formally proposing a 20% salary adjustment to help staff keep up."
Management rep: "I appreciate you bringing this forward. We hear you and we appreciate the work everyone is doing. Can you walk me through what led to the 20% figure?"
Worker's rep:"Of course. We get that the company has costs too. But staff have also taken on extra duties without extra pay this year. We've covered for 2 vacant positions and productivity is up. If we ignore this, morale and retention will drop. People are handing in resignations."
Management rep:"I understand, and I don't want to lose good staff. I did the numbers with finance this morning. A 20% increase would put us over budget. The most we can do right now is 8%, and we'd only be able to implement it in 60 days because of supplier costs and slow sales this quarter."
Worker's rep:"I understand 20% is high and 8% in 60 days feels far. What if we compromise? 10% starting next payroll, 5% in 3 months, and we look at adding health benefits. That way the budget isn't hit all at once, and staff see immediate relief."

Management rep:"I hear you. 10% next month is still tough, but I see where you're coming from. To make 8% more acceptable, we can add: quarterly bonuses based on targets, free skills training for everyone, and an early salary review in 4 months instead of waiting a year."

Worker's rep:"Mr. Patel, we want the company to grow, and happy staff help it grow. 8% won't stop people from leaving. Can we meet in the middle? 10% next month, keep the bonuses and training, and let's do the review in January."
Management rep:"You make a good case. Okay, let's settle at 10% starting next month, plus the bonus and training package. We'll review again in January to see if we can do more. I'll have HR draft the memo today."
Worker's rep:"Deal. Thank you Mr. Patel. This shows the company is listening. I'll communicate this to the team this afternoon."
Management rep:"Thank you Linda. Let's keep this open dialog going.

Question 5

Presentation

Topic: "The Importance of Communication in My Work Environment"

"Good morning everyone. My name is Fikile Mkhize.Today I'll be talking about _The Importance of Communication in My Work Environment.
Have you ever had a task fail just because of one missed message? That's why communication matters.
By the end of this talk, you'll understand 3 key ways communication helps us: teamwork, safety, and customer service."

First, communication builds strong teams. In my workplace, we have daily briefings. This helps us know who is doing what.
Example: Last month, a project was almost delayed because two departments weren't talking. Once we started a WhatsApp group, we finished 3 days early.
Clear communication avoids confusion and duplicated work.

Second, communication keeps us safe. In factories and offices, one unclear instruction can cause accidents.
Example: A 'Wet Floor' sign and verbal warning prevented a fall last week.
We also use hand signals and reports to report hazards. Without this, people get hurt.

Third, good communication keeps customers happy. How we answer calls, emails, and complaints determines if they come back.
Example: A customer was angry about a late delivery. By listening and explaining clearly, we turned them into a regular client.

Active listening, polite tone, and clear information are key here.

In conclusion, communication is the backbone of any workplace. It helps us work as a team, stay safe, and serve customers well.
My challenge to us is: let’s practice active listening, give clear instructions, and give feedback respectfully.
Thank you. I am open to answering questions.
