Summative assessment

TASK 1

I. The reading strategy to use is Skimming + Scanning + Intensive reading because the article is an informational/expository text with factual data, dates, statistics and headings.

- Skimming is used to get the overall idea about South Africa's geography, history, and society.

- Scanning is used to find specific facts like population statistics, official languages, or dates.

- Intensive reading is needed to understand complex sections about politics, economy and social challenges.

II. Headings: Divide the article into clear sections like History, Politics, Economy. They help the reader to quickly locate information.

- Introduction: The first paragraph gives an overview of South Africa's location, provinces and neighbors. It sets the context for the rest of the article.

-Paragraphs:Group related ideas together. Each paragraph deals with one main idea, making the information easier to follow and understand.

- Contents page: Provides a list of all sections and sub-sections. It helps the reader to navigate directly to topics like Geography, Demographics, or Health.

- Photographs: Provide visual evidence. E.g. the "For use by white persons" sign shows apartheid, Mapungubwe Hill shows historical sites. They make abstract information more concrete.

III. The targeted audience is the general public, students, researchers, and anyone seeking factual information about South Africa. The neutral tone and encyclopedic style suggest it is for educational and reference purposes.

IV.The article reflects values of objectivity, diversity, and democracy.It presents South Africa as a multi-ethnic, multi-lingual nation with a constitutional democracy. It also acknowledges challenges like crime, unemployment and inequality, showing a balanced and realistic view.

V. Yes, the evidence is relevant and mostly accurate. The article uses statistics, dates, and references to sources like the World Bank and the Constitution. However, as a Wikipedia extract, it depends on contributors, but the citations provided support the facts given.

VI. For South Africans: May create awareness of both achievements and challenges, and promote national identity.

-For foreign readers: Provides understanding of South Africa's history, culture and current issues.

-For students: Serves as an educational resource for research and learning.

- For policymakers :Highlights social and economic problems that need attention.

VII.Photographs act as visual support. The apartheid "Whites Only" sign helps readers understand racial segregation. The photo of Mapungubwe Hill and Union Buildings gives historical and political context. They make the text more engaging and help readers visualize events and places described.

VIII.The article is largely neutral and factual* with no obvious bias, humour or irony. It avoids stereotyping and uses formal language. The tone is informative, not persuasive. There is some repetition in mentioning challenges like unemployment and inequality to emphasize them, but overall it maintains an objective encyclopedic style.

TASK 2

I. Yes, the heading relates to the content.The title asks if Malema is "an Idiot or an Icon". The content focuses entirely on criticizing Malema's behavior, wealth, and politics. The author describes him as having "stupidity, greed and arrogance" and compares him to Idi Amin. There is no discussion of him being an "icon". So the heading introduces the debate, but the content answers it by presenting a strongly negative view.

II. Yes, the author is biased.

Reasons:

1. Loaded language: Words like "sleazebag", "cancer that destroyed the country", "low lifes", "stupidity" show personal opinion, not facts.

2. One-sided view: The article only presents negative points about Malema and makes no attempt to present a balanced view or his positive contributions.

3. Comparisons: Comparing him to Idi Amin is an exaggeration meant to provoke fear and anger.
